Four months straight positive

Lower yields and tightening spreads

Markets. In July, both tighter credit spreads and lower government yields secured another positive month with a solid 1.12% benchmark return. Year to date benchmark return remained slightly in the red (-0.14%). Health Care, Media and Chemicals outperformed the market in July, whereas Retail, Automobiles & Parts and Personal & Household Goods lagged behind.

The corona vaccines rollout continued to support optimism. However, we see a mounting risk of negative surprises related to the vaccines, due to four big unknowns: The immunity towards new variations of the virus, the long-term side effects, the duration of the immunity, and non-specific effects on other diseases.

In spite of a normalization of the economies, the technical support remains very strong, in terms of gigantic fiscal recovery packages across the board, very low interest rates and central banks directly buying financial assets in the market, including corporate bonds. Probably it is only a matter of time before the direct buying in the market will be phased out, which markets will feel as a tightening of the liquidity environment.

The EU stimulus packages and slump in the economies pushes the Southern European countries into even higher debt levels, combined with a tourist industry melt down, low growth, high unemployment and an overvalued currency. This adds to a lack of structural reforms as well as the negative impact of Brexit completion and mounting demographic challenges.

Return is calculated gross of fees and excluding swing.

The U.S. is also facing challenges. However, the U.S. starting point in terms of economic activity, interest rate levels and demographics is comparatively robust. In addition, the dollar serves as the world's reserve currency. In the longer term, the U.S. economy may also benefit from a repatriation of American manufacturing jobs. Thus, we continue to view U.S. fundamentals as more appealing than that of the Eurozone.

Ahead of benchmark

The Portfolio. July's return of 1.32% was 0.20% better than the benchmark (1.12%). Year to date, the fund's positive return of 0.53% was 0.67 percentage points better than benchmark (minus 0.14%). The year to date outperformance was mainly attributable to the portfolio's defensive qualities. Volatility in monthly return has been lower than the benchmark over the past year, three years and five years.

June's gross trading of 2% was lower than the normal monthly trading range of 3-5% and regional exposures remained stable.

The fund remains underweight of the Eurozone for the above-mentioned reasons. In addition, ECB's massive purchase program is essentially crowding out traditional corporate credit risk from the Eurozone credit space replacing it with concentrated political risk. Over the past three quarters, the fund has gradually moved towards having a moderate capital preservation tilt.
